

CASE STUDY: Destron Fearing

FAST FACTS

Destron Fearing, a global leader in innovative animal identification products, has a presence in more than 40 countries. For almost 70 years, Destron Fearing products have made the lives of livestock producers, companion animal owners, horse owners, wildlife managers, and government agencies easier. Its radio frequency identification products and software solutions automate critical data collection for clients. For more information, visit www.destronfearing.com.

Background Problem

Destron Fearing needed a solution to move an oversized piece of equipment that was too large for a sea container. The company contacted Packnet after hearing about them from colleagues and after discussing needs and solutions, decided Packnet was the right company for the job.

The Solution

Packnet prefabricated packaging for the nearly 30,000-pound main unit, which measured 16' long x 9' wide and 10' tall, and literally built a house around it. Other equipment went into additional smaller crates. The crates were packed and prepared for ocean freight using special vacuum sealing and foil barrier laminate materials with desiccant to prevent corrosion. Cortec™ VpCI-126 Blue poly material was used as well to protect the equipment. With much thought toward design and engineering, and experience with obtaining special permits and handling considerations at port destinations, Packnet ensured the oversized cargo shipped as efficiently as possible.

... PACKNET'S ON-SITE MOBILE PACKING & CRATING SERVICES SAVES DESTRON FEARING TIME AND MONEY

Benefits

Packnet finished the custom packaging quickly and completed final assembly in two days. Destron Fearing's Vice President Bill Kemp summarized his customer experience, "We'll call them again. We have other equipment that needs to be crated and shipped, and Packnet did a very nice job. There was no other way we could have gotten this equipment safely to Europe, and we are pleased with the results."

"Packnet did what they committed to – quoted, stayed with that, and did a very neat job. I think we got our money's worth."

– Destron Fearing Vice President Bill Kemp